Notes for Wilhelm "William" Fredric Alwin:
Wilhelm Alwin & Wilhelmine Gruening

Soon after their marriage in 1853, Wilhelm (William) Alwin and his bride, Wilhelmina Gruening, booked passage on a ship leaving northern Germany for the United States. Because he was an orphan, William believed he had no economic future in his native city of Posen. There was no family business to run, no family farm to till. After seven weeks at sea the Alwins landed in New York City. Then they boarded a smaller boat that took them through the Erie Canal to the Great Lakes' port city of Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

After a year in Milwaukee the Alwins joined a colonization group called the Chicago Land Verein. Its members were looking for a place where they could build a German agricultural community, preserving the spirit and culture of their fatherland. Recent treaty agreements with the Dakota people had opened rich farmlands in southern Minnesota Territory for settlement. The Land Verein selected a townsite on the Minnesota River in Brown County. They called it New Ulm.

William and Wilhelmine, along with 14 other families, left for Minnesota in the spring of 1855. The group followed the natural, winding paths of river valleys to reach their destination. They traveled north along the Mississippi River to Fort Snelling and then south along the Minnesota River to New Ulm. The entire trip took four weeks in prairie schooners drawn by oxen.

On July 4, 1855, the Alwin party arrived in the vicinity of New Ulm. Everyone was excited, expecting to see a flourishing village. They came upon a farmer and asked him for directions to the settlement. In answer the man pointed toward a small cluster of temporary log cabins. Here was New Ulm. Some members of the party tried to hide their disappointment; others cried.

The day after their arrival, Wilhelmine gave birth to her first child, Frederick, in the family schooner. That summer the wagon served as the Alwin's home. With winter approaching William moved his wife and son to a cave dug into the side of a riverbank, Reluctantly William then left for nearby Fort Ridgely. He needed a job to buy tools and seed for the spring planting.

Later one of the Alwin children described the event: "One day my father and mother were working in the fields. Suddenly they looked up, as out of a thicket great crowds of people came running, shouting that the Indians were coming. My father loaded some bedding onto his home-made wagon, and set out for town. In New Ulm the people were just getting ready for the assault. They thrust a pitchfork or old musket into my father's hands, as he unyoked the oxen and let them go. With mother we were crowded into the Erd Building, where the women and children were packed so tightly that several of them smothered to death. For three days the men fought. The town was almost destroyed." After the Dakota were defeated, the Alwins returned to their farm, relieved to find little damage.

Despite the grasshopper plagues of the 1870's, the family prospered. William and Wilhelmine had a total of nine children-eight sons and one daughter. All nine survived into adulthood and helped their parents expand the family holdings. In 1890, after 35 years on the land, William and Wilhelmine moved into New Ulm. A son continued to run the farm after his parents' retirement. William died in 1910. Wilhelmine lived 13 years longer, reaching the age of 99.

In 1976 the Alwin family had more than 200 members. Many still lived in New Ulm. Some migrated to 11 other Minnesota communities and eight other states. Wherever they lived, most Alwins continued to look upon New Ulm as home-the city William and Wilhelmine helped to found over a century ago.

Putzig is near the larger town of Filehne, in the Province of Posen, E. Prussia. Wilhelm, and possibly Wilhelmine, left their town and came to Minnesota in March of 1855. Their first child was born one day after they came by covered wagon and homesteaded in Minnesota on July 4, 1855. Frederich (Frederick) was the first white child born in Brown County.
